involved with the University.

Another goal is promoting the Goldstein Alumni and Faculty Center as the central alumni home on campus with programs and activities geared to alumni needs.

Finally, we intend to excel in internal and external communications to better serve the wide range of ages, backgrounds, and changing demographics of alumni.

I'll be glad to send you a copy of the complete strategic plan if you wish. As you can see, it is an ambitious program, but one we feel confident will result in a closer and more meaningful relationship between our office and our wonderful alumni.

OUR STRATEGIC PLAN

For many months the Office of Alumni Relations has worked with the Alumni Association Board of Directors to develop a strategic plan. Throughout the process we've welcomed input from various groups on campus and off campus. Now our office will implement the plan, working in partnership with our Alumni Association Board of Directors and our board committees. It will serve as a vehicle to guide alumni relations efforts and programs.

We identified five main program goals. First, we want to make the Alumni Association and our office a more effective umbrella and coordinating organization for alumni and alumni groups on and off campus. We'll accomplish this through a variety of methods, including developing councils to coordinate off-campus activity, establishing an Alumni Relations Coordinating Council on campus, and creating stronger links and leadership development opportunities with our clubs.

Second, we'll strengthen our volunteer program and promote involvement in clubs, councils, and in Reunion and Homecoming. We'll also broaden student participation in alumni activities.

Next, we'll expand our alumni-centered programs to encourage more alumni to stay

REUNION: JUNE 4-6

It's almost here! From June 4-6, you can be part of an exciting Reunion weekend. While all alumni are welcome, this year the University honors classes ending in 4 and 9, as well as our special 50-year class, the Class of 1949.

The campus has never looked better. You'll love walking around the Quad, seeing the latest improvements, and marveling at the new buildings that have appeared since your SU days.

You'll rekindle friendships with classmates at luncheons and dinners, and make new friends you can look forward to seeing at future Reunions. You can spend time with the dean of your college and hear about the college's progress and future plans.

When you attend classes at Reunion Alumni College you'll meet SU's finest educators, who offer fascinating glimpses into the subjects you've always wanted to know more about.

Finally, the Arents Awards dinner will give you an opportunity to recognize fellow alumni who make significant contributions to the University and their professions.

It's a weekend sure to be filled with laughter and nostalgia. Be part of it.

And don't forget our Millennium Reunion! We've already set the date for Reunion 2000. Right now, take your red pencil and mark June 2-4 on your calendar, especially if you're part of a class ending in 5 or 0.

ORANGE PRIDE

In Fairfield, Connecticut, they know it, every time they pass Ted Meyer's office. All across the United States they know it, whenever they hear Carol Auerbach Saline give a speech. These two people wear their Orange with pride.

"I've got my furry Otto the Orange right on my door," says Meyer '95, project leader in corporate media relations for General Electric. He received a dual bachelor's degree from the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications and the School of Management. "Whenever there's a big game, or SU is in the playoffs, I show up wearing my bright orange tie."

Meyer is not alone among GE employees; Trustee Joyce Hergenhan '63 and Carla Fischer '87 often join him in an informal cheering section. What's more, he and Fischer return to campus four or five times a year to recruit for GE.

"I'm proud of my education at Syracuse," says Meyer, who was Newhouse's Class Marshal at his Commencement. "I received a great education that got me the best job possible. I want everyone to know I went to Syracuse."

Saline, who received a dual English and journalism degree in 1961, is senior writer at Philadelphia magazine, author of six books—two of them best-sellers—and a popular national lecturer.

"I've just completed Best Friends, part of a trilogy of photo essay collaborations, and speak often about books, sisters, mothers and daughters, and women's relationships," she says. "Whenever I'm introduced, my hosts always say I graduated magna cum laude from Syracuse University. I like being identified with SU. I take pride in it."

Showing your pride in Syracuse is easy to do. Tell people you graduated from the University. Decorate your work space with SU memorabilia. Wear an SU sweatshirt or

T-shirt to casual activities, and outfit your children and grandchildren in them. Sport a Syracuse umbrella—you'll be amazed at who comes up and introduces themselves, whether you're on Main Street, Fifth Avenue, or the Champs-Élysées. At professional appointments, carry a notebook with the SU seal. And whatever you do, don't forget that orange scarf or tie!

INSIDER'S LOOK AT SU

Curious about SU's past? If you're retired, have a few free hours a week, or are just looking for a fascinating inside glimpse at the people and events that shaped Syracuse University, the people in University architectural drawings, and entering computer data. Archives personnel can plan the tasks around your schedule; you can work long term or on a project-by-project basis.

TRAVELS WITH SU

Almost no one speaks English and all the signs are in Cyrillic. There's no Ticketmaster, so you must know the local system to get museum or theater tickets. Once you venture outside the main cities, finding accommodations—even transportation— isn't easy.

"Going to Russia isn't a vacation, it's an adventure," says Peter Gray, associate director of SU's Center for Support of Teaching and Learning. Gray, who's made several trips to Russia and frequently entertains Russian students at SU, helped lead SU travelers on last summer's Journey of the Czars, a two-week exploration on the waterways of Russia.

The alumni joined several other university and professional groups aboard the intimate 302-passenger Novikov Priboy. "This was an educational tour with lectures and demonstrations aboard ship, so we all had a lot in common," Gray says. "It was a most congenial group."

Their adventure started in St. Petersburg, where travelers were treated to a private performance by the Kirov Ballet. "The program was arranged by our guides, who were extraordinarily knowledgeable and well connected," Gray says. "It took place in Catherine the Great's theater in the Hermitage."

After travelers explored the city, their ship wound its way to Lake Ladoga and through a series of locks in the Russian countryside. As they voyaged down the Volga River and then the Moscow River, travelers visited Kizhi Island, Yaroslavl, Kostroma, and Uglich, passing small villages where they stopped to visit historic sites.

"This is territory many Russians never see because it's so difficult to reach," Gray says. "Transportation here is almost nonexistent and there is no place to stay. But on a cruise, you have your hotel with you."

In the village of Irma, for instance, voy-

SU travelers to Russia marveled at the Church of the Transfiguration on Kizhi Island, which was built entirely without nails by, or so legend says, one man using only an ax. It contains 30,000 shingles on 22 separate cupolas.

Archives have a project for you.

Archives needs volunteers to help organize more than 15,000 boxes of historical records, 500,000 visual images, 2,500 films and videotapes, 75 file drawers of clippings, and other SU-related material.

Projects include planning and mounting exhibits, cataloging photographs, doing research on former SU buildings, sorting posters and agers found one enterprising woman who had set up a small breakfast cafe. "We had sweet cakes, tea, and a shot of vodka," Gray laughs. "Everyone gave her a couple of American dollars—a lot of money for a Russian."

The differences in Moscow in just a few years astonished Gray. "Tverskaya Street is unbelievable, with beautiful store facades like those you see in Paris and London," he says. "Our guides showed us all the sights. Most powerful is the famous Red Square, where we saw St. Basil's Cathedral, Lenin's Tomb, and the Kremlin. Underneath the square is an incredible shopping center. It's pure capitalism within this bastion of communism."

Jim G'41 and Gerry Sundquist of Arlington, Virginia, found the trip exotic. "We saw something beyond the usual tourist sights," he says. "When we got home, everyone asked us if the food was edible. It was. Even the meals we had off the ship were good. There's lots of entrepreneurship in the restaurant business."

Sundquist and his wife have switched over to traveling with alumni groups. "We don't want to make our own arrangements," he explains. "With a group your luggage is handled from beginning to end, your meals are arranged, and the company is good. You don't have to do anything except show up. It's a great way to see the world."

MINNOWBROOK GETAWAY

Back by popular demand: a summer weekend at SU's Minnowbrook Conference Center on Blue Mountain Lake in New York's Adirondack Mountains. From July 23 to 25 you can listen to two experts discuss "The Anatomy of a Storm." Award-winning geography professor Mark Monmonier and economics professor emeritus James Price will approach the subject from two different directions. There will be walking tours, socializing, and great meals, all in a spectacular setting. The weekend is sponsored by the SU Alumni Club of Central New York, Syracuse University Alumnae Club, and Office of Alumni Relations. For more information, call Tina Casella at 800-SUALUMS (782-5867) or 315-443-9202; Ellie Ludwig at 315-682-9863; or Allene Ayling at 315-457-0363.

COMING FULL CIRCLE

Several years ago the Houston alumni club was searching for an activity with a sense of purpose and service to the University. According to past president Debbie Fritsche '74, they found it by supporting the Alumni Representative Program.

The program, organized by SU's Office of Admissions, enlists alumni to attend college fairs in their hometowns, disseminate information about Syracuse, and gather prospective students' names.

"We decided to make attending college nights the center of our club's activities," says Fritsche, who coordinates the effort. "In each of the last three years we've gone to 20 to 25 fairs and sent in more than 1,000 contact cards. We can see the effect in the increased number of acceptances from the Houston area."

Club members follow up with an annual New Student Send-Off, to which they also invite returning students and give scholarships for textbooks in the form of TexBucks to several juniors and seniors. When students graduate from the University and come back to Houston, the club gives them a year's free membership.

Aaron Wische '97, a news producer at Fox affiliate KRIV-TV who received one of those awards, has come full circle. He attends college nights in Houston as an alumni representative. "I like being an alumni rep," he says. "I'm proud of Syracuse and it's good for high school students to talk to someone close to their age. I can answer questions about the campus and life at Syracuse now."

Fritsche adds: "Our participation demonstrates some of the University's most important core values. We care and we give back to the University. It shows prospective students what Syracuse is all about."

MANY THANKS

Recently 16 alumni club presidents completed their terms of office (for some, several terms!). Over the years they have provided our clubs around the country with exceptional leadership and inspiration. We thank them for their unfailing commitment.

Michael Lewan G'74

When he finished the M.P.A. program in the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, Michael Lewan hit the ground running and hasn't stopped since.

The young graduate moved right into managing a congressional campaign for Steve Solarz of Brooklyn. Solarz won, and Lewan served as his chief of staff for 12 years. He then spent four years as chief of staff for Senator Joseph Lieberman of Connecticut. He left government and eventually opened the Michael Lewan Company, assisting corporate clients with government affairs strategies and lobbying.

While working with Solarz, Lewan helped draft legislation that formed the basis of his current extracurricular assignment as chair of the United States Commission for the Preservation of America's Heritage Abroad.

"In the Cold War era, Eastern Europe was in the hands of totalitarian societies," Lewan says. "Many of Solarz's constituents were Jews who were concerned about the condition of cemeteries in their former countries. We began to get Communist governments to preserve these sites. Then we decided that institutionalizing the effort would put the full muscle of the government behind it."

Thus the commission was born, staffed by volunteer American citizens dedicated to the preservation of cemeteries, churches, schools, hospitals, libraries, and synagogues.

"We've been very successful," says Lewan. "Over time, the world changed. Communism fell and democracy began taking root. New governments are moving toward righting some of the wrongs done by returning some of the properties unlawfully taken and compensating people for the enormous losses they incurred. There may come a time when the commission's work is finished, but I've found all of it enormously satisfying."

Lewan came to SU at the suggestion of Donna Shalala G'70, now Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, who taught him in graduate school and remains a friend.

"I have very good feelings about what Maxwell did for me, and come back occasionally to talk to classes," Lewan says. "I've pushed quite a few young people in Washington toward the Maxwell School. It's a remarkable educational experience."

Susan Voelker Penny G'70

Why would someone give up handling billions of dollars worth of investments for a major financial institution to devote herself to finding financing for smaller companies? That's easy. It's because Susan Voelker Penny thrives on the challenge.

Penny is developing an investment advisory firm specializing in securing long-term debt financing for mid-sized American companies—those with revenues between $20 million and $200 million.

"Such firms need capital, but major financial institutions often are not interested in investing in them," she explains. "Their only other option is to issue stock, but that is expensive and would dilute ownership."

Penny, of New Canaan, Connecticut, has been involved in financial matters since she graduated with a bachelor's degree in economics from SU, and an M.B.A. from Columbia University. Within a short time, she joined the corporate finance department of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States.

She rose to become senior vice president of corporate finance, one of the few women in the industry with that kind of responsibility. "I managed all aspects of private placement corporate finance, including investment in all risk categories," Penny says. "In 23 years at Equitable, I managed more than 1,000 private transactions in a broad range of industries, including public utilities and energy to retailing." She represented Equitable before the Securities and Exchange Commission and other agencies.

Penny also has carved out time to serve the University as a member of the Board of Trustees, where she chairs its investment and endowment committee and is on its executive committee and academic affairs committee. She's also active with the advisory board of the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs. She received SU's highest honor, the Arents Pioneer Medal, in 1992.

"My strong loyalty to Syracuse increased because of the tremendous progress the University made in developing its mission in student-centered learning," Penny says. "I support the emphasis on learning and the quality of teaching. Because of my faith in Syracuse, I'm working very hard to improve the size and quality of its endowment. It's a big challenge and an incredibly rewarding one."

h jeff Johnson '82

e crisscrosses the country, pitching the advantages of NFL Sunday Ticket, television's most successful sports subscription package. As sales manager of NFL Enterprises, Jeff Johnson oversees all the company's marketing, manages relationships with residential and commercial distributors, trains customer service reps, sets up incentive contests and promotions, and personally manages the national account base. "I'm overworked, but I love every minute of it," he says.

That kind of energy is not unusual for him. This is, after all, a man who while a student served on the School of Management dean's advisory board; was vice president of the Society for the Advancement of Management and president of the Minority Management Society; and worked at Newhouse as preproduction supervisor and assistant video engineer.

Those laurels did not, however, bring him the job he wanted. Instead he landed at Dreyfus Financial Services and later at Citibank, where he rose rapidly but still felt unfulfilled.

He voraciously read trade journals and realized direct broadcast satellite (DBS) would become a major industry. He got his first break with HBO's DBS department. Within a year, the NFL called.

"I like everything about the hands-on aspect of sales," he says. "I work for a top-notch company that brings satellite dish owners up to 13 matchups every Sunday and nearly 200 games a season. I take clients to the Super Bowl and the Pro Bowl. It's great."

Last year Johnson received the industry's first T. Howard Foundation Leadership Award, given for promoting a diversified workplace. "I chair the Career Awareness Committee, traveling the country to discuss career opportunities in the industry for women and minorities," he says.

Despite his schedule, he returns to SU for Coming Back Together reunions and always leads a symposium on the DBS industry. "I tell alumni and students what a terrific opportunity direct broadcast satellite offers. Look at me. I've got the best job in the world."

Steve Hagerty '92, G'93

Steve Hagerty sets off on a 1 a.m. tour of Boston's flooded subway system, dressed in a protective hard hat and steel-toe boots to kick the rats away. It's just part of a day's work for Hagerty, a principal consultant with PricewaterhouseCoopers, which serves as a financial services contractor for the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA). Based in Washington, D.C., Hagerty travels across the country to the sites of such national disasters as the Northridge earthquake, Hurricane Andrew, the Midwest floods, and the Florida fires, leading a team that assesses damage and recommends funding for recovery.

"The aspect of FEMA we see on TV—providing assistance to individuals and meeting immediate needs—represents only one function of the agency," Hagerty says. "Afterwards, millions and even billions of dollars are awarded to state and local governments for debris removal, search and rescue efforts, emergency transportation, and reconstruction of roads, bridges, and buildings."

A self-proclaimed "old-timer" who's been with the company for five years, Hagerty loves his job, including the long hours and fast pace, and the dedicated people he works with.

He expresses that same enthusiasm for his alma mater. "I felt extremely well prepared for this job," he says. "My undergraduate work in the College for Human Development and graduate work in the Maxwell School refined the skills I use every day in my job."

An alumni representative for SU, Hagerty answers questions for prospective students and their parents at spring receptions in the Washington and Baltimore areas. He also initiated a formal recruiting relationship between PricewaterhouseCoopers and the University, and regularly speaks on campus to further encourage that relationship.

"I loved my time at SU," Hagerty concludes. "I established lifelong friendships, received a great education, and have memories to last a lifetime. Syracuse University will always have a special place in my heart."

Joseph Szombathy '53 has been involved in Syracuse University athletics for nearly half a century, both as a student and staff member. When the associate athletic director retires this spring after 42 years of service, he'll leave with recollections of SU sports history and personalities that would be hard to match.

"I've got good memories," says Szombathy, who is also executive director of the Varsity Club of SU for alumni letter winners, the football Letterman's Club, and the Orange Pack athletic fund-raising organization. "The time has flown so rapidly, it's incredible to think I've been here for more than 40 years. Syracuse is a wonderful university, and I think I've given it a fair day's work. It has been a marriage that was good for both of us."

Szombathy came to SU in 1949 as a 17-year-old freshman. He lettered in football as a tight end for three years, leading the Orange in receiving each year. He remains among SU's all-time career reception leaders.

After graduation he became a high school teacher and coach in Pennsylvania. Upon returning to Syracuse in 1957 to earn a master's degree in educational administration, he began working as assistant football coach under SU legend Ben Schwartzwalder. "We became so successful with our football program and I was so busy with various coaching responsibilities, I never left to go back to high school education," Szombathy says.

He worked with Schwartzwalder for 17 years, helping guide the Orange to the 1959 national football championship, and coached in seven bowl games. He eventually moved from the football field to the administrative role he has held for the last 24 years.

Szombathy gets great satisfaction from the fund-raising aspect of his work with the Orange Pack. The organization has grown from 1,000 members in 1974 to more than 7,000 today, and raises $3 million each year. His favorite duty, however, is dealing with people face to face at luncheons, dinners, reunions, and other gatherings. "I consider myself a friendly guy, easy to get along with," he says. "I do fund-raising, but more than that, I serve as the liaison for the University and our alumni, supporters, fans, and friends. Our office keeps many alumni in contact with the University."

daune Robinson Calovini 85

if you happen to catch the Cleveland Indians at Jacobs Field one Sunday this summer, be sure to pay attention to the public address announcer. Daune Robinson Calovini is the first woman to hold that position for the Indians, and is one of only a half-dozen women announcers in Major League Baseball. What's more, Calovini co-hosts the Indians' weekly radio talk show, Tribe Talk.

"I'm thrilled to death to be involved," Calovini says. "It's a dream come true."

Calovini began her broadcast career while studying broadcast journalism in the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications; her first on-air experience was with SU's WJPZ. After graduating she held a series of jobs in radio and television, moving from her hometown of Peoria, Illinois, to Washington, D.C., with husband Frank Calovini '84.

"Even in college, I always wanted to do sports," Calovini says. "I grabbed an opportunity at an all-sports talk radio station in Washington, and in less than a year got a call from the manager of an all-sports station in Cleveland, who lured me there to do sports updates."

Eventually Calovini landed a berth as mid-day on-air personality at Cleveland's WMJL, an oldies radio station, on which she's still heard. "It's the first time I've ever been a DJ and it's lots of fun," she says.

Then came the surprise call to audition for the Indians' Sunday public address announcer spot. "I was more nervous than I'd been in my entire career," Calovini remembers. "Once I got the job, I took special pains learning to pronounce the players' names. I discovered some players actually notice what I'm saying and one even asked me to include the word 'Junior' with his name occasionally."

Calovini, who frequently returns to SU for sports events and has been active in alumni clubs, first in Washington and now Cleveland, finds her work for the Indians hasn't gone unnoticed.

Recently she was named one of Cleveland's most interesting people of 1999 by a local magazine.

"Announcing the games and doing Tribe Talk is really a blast," Calovini says. "I'm doing what I really love."
